

Christmas Truce

In the week leading up to Christmas French, British and German soldiers crossed trenches to exchange seasonal gifts and talk. In some areas they went into no man's land to mingle and exchange food and souvenirs. There were joint burials, prisoner swaps and card singing. In some cases men played football with each other.

I am writing about my great grandad his name is David Robb. His school was hard you had to do all your work or you would be beaten. My great grandad only got beaten once. When he had free time he read or played football afterschool with his friends.
