In 1918 my nana's godmother and uncle lived in a house on the outskirts of Douglas. Paddy Cronin, my nana's uncle, was a suspected member of the I.R.A., so the British soldiers told the Black and Tans to shoot at Paddy's house.

There were four bullet holes all together and they were spread through out the landing and front room. The bullet holes were there until 1993 when Paddy's wife Cathy past away. Since then

The house has been sold and refurbished, But the story lives on through family and friends.
